The Smart Way to End the War on Drugs, A Report from the Center for Constitutional Rights January 25, 2015 Gavin de Becker, the world-renowned private detective, detective fiction writer and security consultant, has worked with the Center for Constitutional Rights (CCR) to create a report, "The Smart Way to End the War on Drugs," which provides crucial information on the issues surrounding contemporary efforts to "legalize" drugs and provides a prescription for how to address the drug war head on. The report has been published as the culmination of a two-year investigation by CCR into the world of legal cannabis and its effectiveness. It analyzes the various ways in which the War on Drugs—and the legalization movement that accompanies it—has played out in the real world, highlighting the successes and pitfalls of these efforts. As its title suggests, "The Smart Way to End the War on Drugs" argues that a safe and effective way to end the War on Drugs is to end prohibition and legalize cannabis, thereby opening the door to a wide range of new possibilities for addressing America's drug epidemic, including the possible relaxation of laws against other illicit drugs. Over the past 40 years, CCR has taken the lead in challenging laws criminalizing individuals, supporting efforts to end the drug war, and expanding access to public health and social services for people harmed by prohibition. "The Smart Way to End the War on Drugs" shows how CCR is pushing back on the influence of the drug war industry and supporting the expansion of safe and responsible cannabis access for people in the US, Canada and internationally. This report was released on National Drug Law Day. What did you find when you delved into the world of legal cannabis? It's come a long way in the last five years. Prohibition has finally been put to an end and cannabis is now a legal plant in more than half the states in the US, three in Canada and four more countries altogether. More than half of the counties in the US now have dispensaries in operation, meaning that there's a huge market for legal marijuana in all states. It's never been easier to access cannabis for medical reasons, and there is a huge range of products available in legal dispensaries, from infused edibles to cream to tinctures. In
